ISLAMABAD: In response to a question about Pakistan's reaction to the arrest of a gang in India with radioactive material, the Spokesperson , Ministry of Foreign Affairs Mumtaz Zahra Baloch stated "Pakistan is gravely concerned at the reports of recurring incidents of theft and illicit sale of nuclear and other radioactive materials in India. In the latest incident, a gang of individuals were found in illegal possession of a highly radioactive and toxic substance Californium, worth US$ 100 million in quantity. Three incidents of theft of Californium were also reported in 2021. Last month, five individuals with a radioactive device reportedly stolen from Bhabha Atomic Research Center (BARC) were also found from Dehradun. These recurring incidents call into question the measures taken by New Delhi for the safety and security of nuclear and other radioactive material. These incidents also suggest the existence of a black market for sensitive, dual use materials inside India. The international community seeks an earnest disclosure from the Indian authorities as to how a sealed Radioactive Source (SRS) material, like Californium, was in the possession of the apprehended individuals. A recipe for regional mayhem

AMANAT ALI CHAUDHRY

he 34th report of the Analytical Support and Sanctions Monitoring Team submitted to the UN Security Council, pursuant to the latter's resolution 2734, makes for sombre reading. The UN report, which was released in the last week of July, provides an overview of the daunting challenge of transnational terrorism, including the budding alliances between terrorist organizations such as the TTP and Al-Qaeda, the scale of their operations and the potential dangers for regional and global peace and security if the global collaborative efforts are not made to stem the tide of militancy.

The report identifies Afghanistan as the epicentre of terrorism where the presence of the ISIL (or ISKP), TTP, Al-Qaeda in the Subcontinent (AQIS), the East Turkmenistan Islamic Movement (ETIM) and the Turkestan Islamic Party (TIP) has shaped complex security dynamics that not only threaten Pakistan but also have the potential to spill over to the wider region. In what is a clear validation of Pakistan's position, the report highlights the increased terrorism challenge posed by the TTP. It notes the Afghan Taliban's active support, patronage and protection to the TTP inside Afghanistan, factors that have enhanced the latter's operational capacity to the extent that the TTP even targeted Chinese nationals working on a dam project in March this year. The report says, "There is increased support and collaboration between TTP and the Taliban, sharing manpower and training camps in Afghanistan and conducting more lethal attacks under the banner of Tehrik-e Jihad Pakistan."

The more worrisome aspect of the UN report is an ongoing collaboration between Al-Qaeda and the TTP. Al-Qaeda, which remains dormant in Afghanistan, is actively involved in imparting training to local Afghan fighters and TTP operatives including suicide bomber training in the Kunar province. Despite its inability to conduct large-scale external operations, Al-Qaeda is forming collaborations with regional terrorist organizations such as ETIM, TIP, the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan, and Jamaat Ansaarullah with a focus on expanding itself into Central Asia. It is also using its period of dormancy to reorganize itself and ramp up training activities in an enabling environment of Afghanistan. It is in this context that the increasing cooperation between the TTP and Al-Qaeda can lead to the former becoming an umbrella organization for other terrorist groups. This development, the UN report notes, will escalate the threat against Pakistan. Complicating this scenario is the report's ominous finding that ETIM/TIP and Jaish-al-Adl have jointly planned and executed attacks on Chinese interests. With the TTP becoming a leading organization in a regional terrorist syndicate actively assisted and facilitated by the Afghan Taliban, the security risks for Pakistan will multiply manifold. The report notes the intensification of TTP-perpetrated terrorist attacks inside Pakistan (more than 800 attacks documented during the reporting period), which mainly targeted military installations. These attacks represent a marked increase from 573 and 203 incidents of terrorism in 2021 and 2023 respectively. The report also highlighted the role of Al-Qaeda in promoting cooperation between the Majeed Brigade and the TTP. The Majeed Brigade has already claimed responsibility for two terrorist attacks, one on the Gwadar port complex on March 2 and another on the naval air base in Turbat. These attacks were perpetrated to send a warning to investors. The report also mentioned one of the member states' concern at the possibility of a future nexus between the TTP, Majeed Brigade and ISK, which will pose a renewed threat to Balochistan and Sindh. The report noted the TTP's use of the modern weapons left by the Nato/US forces in Afghanistan including night vision capability, which they have used in attacking the border posts of the Pakistan military. The collaboration with Al-Qaeda will further help the TTP get access to weapons funded by Al-Qaeda. Pakistan has consistently highlighted the threat posed by the TTP. Over the years, Islamabad has stayed engaged with the Taliban authorities in Kabul to convince them to rein in the TTP. It has also called for more international efforts to suck the financial and operational oxygen out of the TTP and other terrorist organizations that directly threaten Pakistan's security. While the Afghan Taliban have been fighting ISIL, which has challenged them ideologically, operationally and territorially, the interim authorities in Kabul have chosen to ignore Pakistan's pleadings vis-a-vis the TTP. As noted by the UN report, they have rather given complete support and autonomy to the TTP to carry out the terrorist attacks inside Pakistan. Without the impunity granted to the TTP, Pakistan's security challenges could not have acquired the kind of dangerous levels they have in the last two years.

Despite the non-accommodation of Pakistan's very genuine security concerns by the Afghan interim government, the country has shown strategic patience. Pakistan's approach to dealing with the TTP has been characterized by four planks. First, the Pakistan Army has demonstrated proven capability in eradicating terrorism, destroying its vast network and securing peace in the country. The anti-terrorism campaigns include kinetic actions, intelligencebased operations, and developing a national consensus to purge Pakistan of terrorism of all huesand colours. The fact that the TTP was pushed to Afghanistan from where it is carrying out terrorism inside Pakistan says a lot about the success and efficacy of the military operations. Pakistan will continue to deal with the TTP with an iron hand, going forward. Second, in bilateral engagements with Afghanistan, the Pakistani authorities have reminded the Taliban that the TTP remains a major hurdle in the Afghan Taliban's efforts to win international recognition and become part of the global community. The Taliban have been told that the impunity provided to the TTP will lead to the establishment of a wider, regionalized terrorism syndicate, whose terrorist actions will bring a heavy cost for Kabul.

student-led mass movement has shaken Bangladesh, leading to the ouster of the country's iron lady, former PM Sheikh Hasina. Young people and students have once again shown their power. Now an interim government has been installed to run the country. Bangladesh has a long history of mass movements challenging incumbent governments. Bangladesh was in the grip of violence and chaos for days. Businesses and garment factories remained closed, causing huge economic losses. The clashes between the police and student protestors continued for weeks.

Hasina Wajid refused to accept the protesters' demands and tried to quell the movement with brutal state force. More than 300 protesters were killed and many were injured during the protest. The police also arrested more than 10,000 students and political activists. Hasina did whatever was possible for her to crush the protests but failed. Despite the state's brutal repression and killings, the movementgained momentum and led to Hasina's

The former Bangladeshi PM ruled with an iron fist for 15 years - till the week-long protests forced her to flee on August 5 to India. She is currently there and looking for a safe country to find asylum in. It is rather surprising to see how a protest movement ended the 15-year-long rule of the Awami League leader.

Hasina can only blame herself for her downfall. She made fatal mistakes while dealing with student protests. She failed to fully grasp the situation and made one mistake after the other, also losing the opportunity to reconcile with angry protesters when she refused to apologize for the killings of students.

The protests were temporarily paused after the Bangladeshi Supreme Court ruled on the quota system. Protesters then put forward demands like a public apology from Hasina for the violence, restoration of internet services, reopening of college and university campuses, and release of those arrested. There was no demand for her resignation at that stage. But when she refused to accept these demands, the protesters returned to the streets, now demanding her resignation.

Instead of passionately engaging with protesting students, she resorted to repressive measures. She relied on the police and the increased inequality in the country, Bangladesh into a one-party state leading to a sharp divide between the rich and the poor.

The rich in Bangladesh amass huge wealth at the cost of the working class and the youth. Economic growth in the country has been mainly focused on the garment sector, and other sectors have not been performing well. The garment industry produces low-paying jobs. Educated young people in Bangladesh are not interested in joining the private sector due to lower wages and the casual nature of jobs

These are the reasons that led to the mass movement against the government. Young people have not been satisfied with their economic situation and the lack of decent job opportunities. So, naturally, high levels of frustration had been brewing She was not ready to provide an opportunity to the people to express their anger and discontent through democratic means like elections and peaceful protests. She tried everything to crush the opposition and adopted a zero-tolerance policy towards dissent and opposition.

She won another term in farce elections held in January this year, which were boycotted by opposition parties. It was clear from the intensity of the protests that people were just looking for an opportunity to express themselves. The high court ruling on the quota system triggered a movement that was waiting to erupt. As soon as the Bangladesh army withdrew its support, the Hasina Wajid-led government col-

Dr Yunus was forced to leave the country by the Hasina Wajid government and had been living in France before his return to the country. When a Bangladeshi high court restored the 56 per cent quota for the families of freedom fighters, minorities and women in public-sector jobs, especially in the civil services, students and young people lost their patience and took to the streets. Even though the Supreme Court overturned the high court decision and fixed the quota at 6.0 per cent, it failed to pacify the protesters.

Amid all this, Hasina failed to understand that high economic growth is not improving the lives of millions of people. In the country of 170 million, 32 million young people are unemployed. So, it is understandable why the students protested the restoration of the quota system.

History of Pakistan

In 2001 a National Housing Policy was approved to review the status of nationwide housing and to identify sources of revenue, land availability, incentives to developers and contractors, and the conditions needed to make construction cost-effective.

There are three general classes of housing in Pakistan: pukka houses, built of substantial material such as stone, brick, cement, concrete, or katchi (or kuchha ["ramshackle"]) houses, constructed of less-durable material (e.g., mud, bamboo, reeds, or thatch); and semipukka houses, which are a mix between the two. Housing stocks comprise an equal number of semipukka and katchi houses (about two-

(roughly one-fifth of the total) are the better-variety pukka houses. Urban areas are dominated by ramshackle neighbourhoods known locally as katchi abadis, which can be found in all cities. In such unplanned and unregulated areas, safe drinking water and proper sanitation are rare (as they are in rural areas), and the buildings themselves are often flimsy and unsafe. Throughout the country, roughly half of all urban residents live in such areas.

Pakistan's housing problem increased dramatically with the devastating 2005 earthquake in the northern regions, where more than half a million houses were destroyed or severely damaged over a vast fifths each), and remaining houses area. The Pakistani government quickly established the Earthquake Reconstruction and Rehabilitation Authority (ERRA), which received funding from the World Bank and a large number of other sources. In addition to constructing new earthquake-resistant houses and reinforcing existing structures, the ERRA is repairing roads and other infrastructure in the region. Massive floods in 2010 destroyed or damaged an estimated 1.7 million houses, forcing millions of Pakistanis to move to temporary shelters.

Pakistan's literacy rate is substantially lower than that of many developing countries; roughly half of all adults are literate, the literacy rate being significantly higher for males than for females. A substantial proportion of those who are literate, however, have not had any formal education. Educational levels for women are much lower than those for men. The share of females in educational levels progressively diminishes above the primary school level. Education in Pakistan is not compulsory. Since independence Pakistan has increased the number of primary and secondary schools, and the number of students enrolled has risen dramatically. Teacher training has been promoted by the government and by international agencies. Higher education is available at vocational schools, technical schools, and colleges throughout the country.

Severe solar storm hits Earth

On Monday, the Earth experienced a powerful solar storm that might bring the northern lights to unusually southern latitudes, according to a US agency, as reported by AFP.

The US National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) reported that a levelfour geomagnetic storm, on a scale of five, was detected starting at 1500 GMT.

While these conditions could last for several hours, NOAA indicated that they are not expected to intensify further.

"A severe geomagnetic storm includes the potential for aurora to be seen faintly as far south as Alabama and northern California,' NOAA said in a statement, referring to US states. The new solar storm is caused by coronal mass ejections (CMEs), which are explosions of particles leaving the Sun. When these particles arrive on Earth, they disrupt its magnetic field. "There are a lot of auroras now... If it lasts until nightfall here, we might be able to see some," Eric Lagadec, an astrophysicist at the Cote d'Azur Observatory in France, said on X. On Sunday, NASA astronaut Matthew Dominick published on X a superb photo of the aurora borealis — or Northern Lights — taken from the International Space Station, where he is currently stationed. But solar or geomagnetic storms can also trigger undesirable effects.

For example, they can degrade high-frequency communications, disrupt satellites, and cause overloads on the electricity grid. Operators of sensitive infrastructure have been notified to put in place measures to limit these effects, NOAA said. In May, the planet went through the most powerful geomagnetic storms recorded in 20 years. They caused auroras to light up the night sky in the United States, Europe, and Australia, at much lower latitudes than usual.

Anti-inflammatory diet might lower risk of dementia

Eating a healthy diet that dampens inflammation in the body could lower your odds for dementia, especially if you already have heart risk factors, a new Swedish study shows.

So-called anti-inflammatory diets focus on foods like vegetables, fruits, whole grains, fish and beans and include heart-healthy regimens such as the Mediterranean diet.

In a study involving more than 84,000 older adults tracked for more than 12 years, those who adhered to an anti-inflammatory diet had a 21% lower odds of developing dementia, compared to people who ate an unhealthy pro-inflammatory diet rich in red meats, eggs, dairy and processed foods. When looking specifically at older adults with ailments such as heart disease or diabetes, the risk of dementia fell by 31% when they stuck to an anti-inflammatory diet, reported a team led by Abigail Dove. She's an investigator at the Aging Research Center at the Karolinska Institute, in Stockholm. MRI brain scans of a subset of more than 9,000 of the participants also showed neurological benefits linked to the healthier diet.

There were "positive changes within the brain," noted Dr. Liron Sinvani, director of geriatric hospital services for North Shore University Hospital, in Manhasset, N.Y. "Larger gray matter volume -- gray matter is good -- and lower burden of 'white matter hyperintensities' was seen among those who ate an anti-

"So really, it's showing not only less clinically diagnosed dementia, but also [healthy] changes in the brain that we see on imaging," she noted. The findings were published Monday in the journal JAMA Network Open.

Dove's team looked at data in the UK Biobank, which has tracked the health of British adults for years. The new study involved more than 84,000 people under the age of 60 who were free of dementia when they entered the database between 2006 and 2010. Over an average of 12.4 years, 1,559 (1.9%) of the participants developed dementia. Data on each person's dietary intake was also recorded, and it revealed a significant lowering of the risk for dementia among those who most closely adhered to the anti-inflammatory diet.

Meanwhile, I, President of Pakistan Asif Ali Zardari, felicitate the entire Pakistani nation on the 78th Independence Day of Pakistan.

This day marks the culmination of the historic political struggle of the Muslims of India for their right to self-determination. The creation of Pakistan through a peaceful and democratic struggle marks an unprecedented and unparalleled chapter in history. On this day, we pay homage to leaders and workers of the Pakistan movement as well as our forefathers who rendered innumerable sacrifices for Pakistan. Today, we need to set aside our differences and work committedly for the unity, integrity, and economic stability of the country in the face of current challenges. Our country has been blessed with abundant human and natural resources and it is our responsibility to utilize these for the welfare of our people. We need to uphold the rule of law, strengthen democratic institutions, and work wholeheartedly in the public interest. Our nation has great hopes from us, and we must strive to meet their expectations.

We need to draw inspiration from the words of our Quaid when he said "If we want to make this great State of Pakistan happy and prosperous, we should wholly and solely concentrate on the well-being of the people, especially of the masses and the poor". It is time to invest in our youth and women, improve service delivery, and create a business-friendly environment to make Pakistan a great nation.

As we celebrate our freedom, let us also remember our Kashmiri and Palestinian brethren, who have been struggling for over seven decades for their freedom and right to self-determination. Pakistan reaffirms its support to the people of the Indian Illegally Occupied Jammu and Kashmir and Palestine for their legitimate rights. Let's pledge to work for the uplift of our people and make Pakistan a prosperous country. May Allah be with us all.
