Ahsan emphasizes engineers' Crucial role in shaping nation's progress

ISLAMABAD: Federal Minister for Planning, Development and Special Initiatives Prof. Ahsan Iqbal highlighted on Monday the pivotal role of engineers in shaping the nation's progress, describing them as the backbone of any society.

Addressing the 2nd International Conference on new trends in Civil Engineering at University of Central Punjab (UCP) here on Monday, he highlighted engineers significant contributions to key national projects such as the Mangla Dam, Tarbela Dam, motorways and nuclear programs, said a press release issued here.

The minister while commenting on the growing population of Pakistan said that according to the latest census, the country's population growth rate had increased from 2 percent to 2.55 percent and this put immense pressure on resources, agriculture and food security.

He pointed out that the demand for infrastructure has also escalated, saying that in 2013, the federal government's budget was 340 billion rupees. By 2018, it had increased to 1,000 billion rupees. However, now the budget had decreased to just 700 billion rupees.

Despite the economic challenges, he expressed optimism, pointing out that the stock market had reached a milestone of 100,000 points.

Iqbal emphasized that "if the nation works together, conditions can improve quickly".

He further said that in the 21st century, the survival of nations depends on the strength of their economies.

The planning minister acknowledged that Pakistan made significant progress since its independence still there were areas where the nation had to advanced further, adding that he underscore the need for continued effort and innovation to keep pace with global developments.

Prof.Ahsan Iqbal emphasized the importance of national unity and collective reflection on the country's future direction and goals.

He urged that Pakistan's progress must be rooted in truth, integrity and realistic efforts, warning that relying on false narratives or distractions would hinder the nation's potential.

He stressed that for Pakistan to thrive, it must embrace a positive and constructive mindset, as the choices made today will define the nation's legacy for generations to come.

He reminded the participants of the conference that Pakistan was a brand and it was essential to restore its image by maintaining its ideals and thinking. Working together, Pakistan can overcome its challenges, as no external power can propel the country forward without its own efforts.

He urged engineers to come together as a united professional community and rise to the challenges ahead, emphasizing that while time and resources are limited, the opportunities to make a meaningful impact are vast and critical.

High-level delegation of foreign investors calls on Finance Minister

VOM Report

ISLAMABAD: A high-level delegation of foreign investors and business professionals, mostly based in the United States, called on Minister for Finance and Revenue Senator Muhammad Aurangzeb on Monday.

The minister welcomed the delegation and briefed them about the country's recent macroeconomic progress, highlighting significant achievements in overcoming longstanding challenges, said a new release.

"Pakistan has historically struggled with twin deficits; however, due to improved export performance, the economy is now operating with a surplus in both fiscal and current accounts. Foreign exchange reserves have crossed the $12 billion mark, inflation has been brought down to single digits, and the policy rate is moving in the right direction," he said.

He further elaborated on the government's comprehensive reform agenda, encompassing privatization, state-owned enterprise (SOE) restructuring, rightsizing of the federal government, and pension reforms.

The minister also addressed two existential challenges faced by Pakistan: rapid population growth and climate change. "With a population growth rate exceeding 2%, we face severe implications for food security, child stunting, and out-of-school children.

Climate change exacerbates these vulnerabilities, making it imperative to secure both financial and technical assistance to tackle these issues effectively," he remarked.

The minister mentioned that he has emphasized the importance of these priorities in discussions with international partners, including World Bank President Ajay Banga.

Ambassador Ali Jehangir Siddiqui informed the minister about the composition of the delegation, the purpose of their visit and their interaction with different stakeholders during the visit so far.

Advisor to the Finance Minister Khuram Shehzad and senior officers of the Finance Division and Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) were also present.

The delegation put together by Ambassador Ali Jehangir Siddiqui of the JS Bank comprised leading entrepreneurs, business practitioners and professionals from diverse sectors, including technology, academia, and finance, with lead members such as Auren Hoffman Chief Executive Officer of Safe-Graph, Kristen Edwards Marqua (Hakluyt & Company), Michael Levi (The D.E. Shaw Group), Dr. Jeff Chang (Rad AI), and others.

The briefing was followed by a detailed question-and-answer session. Addressing a query on implementing International Monetary Fund (IMF) conditions and structural reforms, the minister said: "The willingness and ability to execute reforms are crucial. While we have significant work ahead, as long as we maintain commitment and momentum, and stay the course, we will achieve the desired outcomes."

Responding to another question, he stressed the role of the private sector in driving economic growth. "Policy frameworks and continuity are the government's responsibility, but the private sector must lead the economy.

The government's focus is on creating an enabling environment to support this transition," he said. The delegation appreciated the government's efforts in stabilizing the economy and discussed opportunities for collaboration in areas such as innovation, investment, and financial inclusion.

The meeting concluded with a shared resolve to strengthen U.S.-Pakistan cooperation in achieving mutual economic goals and addressing shared challenges.

The policies will continue

SARMAD KHAWAJA

With Mr Trump's election as US president, there is one big question right now about democracy and rule of law worldwide. Will they weaken? At first glance, the answer is yes. The Republican Party that Mr Trump leads is eerily similar to several European parties where the extreme right-wing has taken hold: AfD in Germany, Le Penn's National Rally in France, Meloni's The Brothers of Italy, who are directly descended from Mussolini's fascists, Austria's Freedom Party, which calls its leader Volkskanzler – the Nazi term used for Hitler – Poland's Justice Party, Greece's Golden Dawn party, etc as well to our very own PTI. Such parties have caused "the level of democracy enjoyed by the average person in the world in 2023 (to fall) to 1985 levels", says the V-Dem Institute in its latest World Democracy Report.

So, Mr Trump's agenda should worry us if we care about democracy and rule of law. But look closer and you see nothing new in his fundamental policies. On these, he sees eye to eye with the Democrats: hawkishness towards China, unremitting increases in the US war budget, and unconditional support of Israel.

None bodes well for democratic norms and rule of law worldwide. Yet, these policies don't change no matter who the president is. A closer look at each explains these continuities: First, why hawkishness towards China? Because a rising China threatens US economic dominance.

China "is the only country with both the intent to reshape the international order and, increasingly, the economic, diplomatic, military, and technological power to do it", says Mr Anthony Blinken – and rightly so. China has pulled ahead in several vital technologies such as lithium batteries, microchips, high-speed railways, and electric vehicles. Its production speed and scales are 5-10 times faster and higher than anywhere else. It accounts for a third of world manufacturing production or three times more than the US's share. And its global trade and investments eclipse those of the US.

So, the US will keep hurting China: ramp up anti-China rhetoric, demonise it, impose trade barriers and sanctions, fracture the world trading system, and undermine the WTO.

If Mr Trump imposes 60 per cent or more tariffs on Chinese imports, as promised, and more Huawei-like sanctions, which cut Huawei's access to advanced US technologies, the trade war with China will aggravate. But China isn't taking it lying down. The Huawei sanctions didn't work. It found alternate supply chains, and roared back, firming up its leading position in the global telecom market.

You can't slow China down this way. Its planned economy is versatile. It bends and bows at will. It has reduced dependence on exports as its key driver of growth. And it comfortably maintains GDP growth of over 5.0 per cent propelled by state-led investments and growing consumer demand.

Instead, a trade war hurts the US more and drags us all, the rest of the world, down. For instance, tariffs on Chinese goods will be inflationary, and Chinese loans to finance US debt ($749 billion) may be jeopardised. And since the US and China account for 43 per cent of the world's GDP, whatever happens between the two affects the rest of the world. A sneeze in their relations causes a worldwide cold, which must be avoided at all costs.

Second, why does the US war budget rise unrelentingly? On the surface the answer is to make the world 'safe for democracy' and 'the American way of life,' which means controlling the oceans and servicing 700 military bases in 80 countries, including 313 around China, to cordon, contain, isolate, and punish it.

Dismantling American military hegemony is not on anyone's radar in the US. And the numbers show it: the 2024 $1.9 trillion US war budget is more than the countries with the next nine largest war budgets combined. And, rarely in the past half century have there been years when this amount was less than in the previous year confirming president (General) Eisenhower's concerns about the 'unwarranted influence of the military-industrial complex,' and turning the US into a garrison state promoting the shadowy needs of an all-powerful military elite. These are the real reasons for the US's unremittingly rising war budget.

Finally, about the US backing Israel's military and territorial interests. The authors of 'The Israel Lobby and US Foreign Policy' say this is because the Israel lobby has a firm grip on the US system of power and influence – its legislature, executive, think tanks, and media – led by the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), which drives the US into the blind endorsement of everything Israel does.

For instance, AIPAC takes credit for passing more than a hundred pro-Israel bills/resolutions annually, such as the House of Representatives resolution last year celebrating the US$94.7 billion aid given and promised to Israel during 1998-2028. Taming AIPAC's influence is impossible.

All in all, with Mr Trump, the embrace of these policies will continue. But hawkishness towards China, unremitting rise in the US war budget, and unconditional support of Israel make a toxic brew. They will make Mr Trump's presidency a grim reality.

But one all too familiar, and nothing out of the usual line of business.

GHASSAN CHARBEL

The long night in Damascus was nothing short of seismic. Opponents could not have predicted the rapid collapse of the Syrian regime. The army was not prepared to fight the opposition advance that was gaining momentum. Russia did not want to get involved and Hezbollah was exhausted.

Bashar Assad saw the writing on the wall. It happens. The errors committed by the ruler accumulated and he had no other choice than to seek exile. So, he got on that plane and left.

Syria on Sunday woke up to a new and unbelievable reality. It did not find the man who had been in power for 24 years. The man who was believed to be different and who would not face the same fate as others. No one believed that the American tanks would advance and tear down his statues like they did to Saddam Hussein's statues in Baghdad. He was not worried as he watched Libyans chase down Muammar Qaddafi and end his life and years of rule.

It never occurred to him that he could face the same fate as Ali Abdullah Saleh at the hands of the Houthis. He dismissed the scenes of Hosni Mubarak in court. He never believed that he would suffer the same fate as Zine El-Abidine Ben Ali. Assad was confident that he was strong, different and capable of weathering the storms. Assad believed that he inherited from his father a regime that could fight fires and contain earthquakes, which were many during his long term.

He lived through the earthquake of the Sept. 11, 2001, attack and

Assad's downfall and fate decided in Damascus ordered his security agencies to cooperate in a limited capacity with the Americans. He had not yet developed his leanings toward Iran, but the American invasion of Iraq pushed him in that direction. He feared that the Baath Party's rule would be the American campaign's next target after it was done with Iraq. Damascus and Tehran had a mutual interest in destabilizing the of thousands of people were killed and millions displaced. He resorted to barrel bombs and chemical weapons. The opposition drew near his palace, but the Vladimir Putin-Qassem Soleimani understanding helped him fend off the earthquake. Assad came to power in the year 2000, six months after Putin assumed control of Russia and the international scene and less than played a big game with a hostile player called Benjamin Netanyahu, who would have a say in deciding Assad's fate. Netanyahu destroyed Gaza and then shifted to the timing of the American elections to take out the Hezbollah leadership. Balances were upended. In Idlib, Assad's opponents were waiting for the right opportunity to pounce. They never believed in the "de-escalation" agreement and "Trump time." Erdogan chose to punish Assad, who repeatedly refused offers to hold a meeting. He punished Assad and Syria's Kurds as well.

Ahmed Al-Sharaa, known as Abu Mohammed Al-Golani, lit the spark. The still waters became a flood that swept Aleppo, Hama, Homs and Damascus. Soleimani and Nasrallah were no longer there to help Assad. The supreme leader did not have an answer and Putin was mired in the bloodbath in Ukraine.

Fates were decided in Damascus during that long night. It changed the fate of Syria and its regional position. It changed the regional scene. It severed the route of exporting the revolution and the smuggling of rockets from Tehran to Beirut. Hezbollah was brought down to size from its regional role to returning to UN Security Council Resolution 1701. One night in Damascus changed balances in Lebanon.

The scene was different yesterday. Syria is without Assad and without Hezbollah. Assad got on that plane and left. An entire era is over. The president left Syria and the region is left to grapple with the "day after" and its challenges.

Today in History

History of Pakistan

In 1996 the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) was formed by cricket player Imran Khan to oppose government corruption and promote social welfare. It remained uncompetitive and marginal until the 2010s, when it took a decidedly populist approach to politics, organizing large rallies and courting several veteran politicians. In the 2013 elections the party received the second highest number of votes for seats in the National Assembly and won leadership of the provincial government in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. Its popularity continued to surge, especially as a corruption scandal shook confidence in the ruling party in the run-up to the 2018 elections; it emerged as the National Assembly's largest party after elections were held. Ethnic interests are served by organizations such as the Muttahida Qaumi Movement (formerly the Muhajir Qaumi Movement) in Karachi and Hyderabad, the Sindh National Front in Sindh, and the Balochistan Students Union in Balochistan. Pakistan's military has been led from inception by a highly trained and professional officer corps that has not hesitated, as a body, to involve itself in politics. The military consists of an army (the largest of the uniformed services), air force, and navy, as well as various paramilitary forces. Each of the services is headed by a chief of staff, and the chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff is the senior officer of the military hierarchy. The Pakistani military is one of the largest and best-trained in the world. Troops serve on a voluntary basis, and there is seldom a shortage of manpower. Military life in Pakistan is viewed as prestigious, and soldiers both active and retired can expect numerous perks and benefits from service. Enlisted personnel are given the chance to improve themselves through study and education, and officers are trained through the service academy or through several of the country's professional colleges. The army is extremely well supplied, having devoted much of its considerable resources to the domestic production of weapons. The army has several thousand main battle tanks, armoured personnel carriers, and artillery pieces (both towed and self-propelled). The army also fields multiple-launch rocket systems and several short-range missile systems. The naval fleet consists of a variety of relatively small surface crafts (destroyers, frigates, missile craft, and patrol boats), as well as a small submarine fleet and an air arm. The air force flies several squadrons of high-performance fighter and ground-attack aircraft and a number of support and cargo planes. Pakistan's military-industrial complex is large and well-funded. The country has developed its own main battle tanks and surface naval craft—generally on designs contracted from foreign corporations—and has fielded its own missile systems, several of which appear capable of delivering unconventional payloads.

Amy Poehler voiced Joy in 'Inside Out' and its 2024 sequel 'Inside Out 2'

Amy Poehler's approach to life has been transformed inside and out—fittingly, since starring in the Inside Out movies. The actress and comedian, who voiced the character Joy in the 2015 original and its 2024 sequel, told People how the role has opened a new window for her in understanding and navigating emotions. "My experience in Inside Out and Inside Out 2 has truly, fundamentally changed my life," she said. "Playing a character like Joy, having big conversations about what our emotions do in us and how they live in us and how we're supposed to experience them."

This isn't the first time the Saturday Night Live alum has opened up about the emotional weight of her role in the Disney-Pixar's films.

Reflecting on how the positivity-packed role led her to a slew of moments of epiphanies, she previously told the outlet, "It's so deep." "Because it's like talking to your inner child, talking to you as a parent, talking to you as yourself, talking to the future version of you," Poehler, 53, explained. "You have to really go there." "It's really satisfying to do it," though she found the experience challenging but rewarding. Inside Out 2 delves into new emotional territory as Riley navigates the turbulent waters of puberty as she turns 13.

The teenager faces the confusing mix of emotions as Joy and the team's newest member, Anxiety, compete for dominance in Riley's brain.

Poehler shared that she could relate to the struggles depicted in the animated film, having experienced similar challenges at that age.

Additionally, as a mother to two teenagers—sons Archie, 16, and Abel, 14—she is gaining fresh insight through her children's experiences. With the exploration of emotional growth, Inside Out movies appears to be as transformative for its audience as it has been for Poehler herself.

WhatsApp users can now easily send sticker packs to anyone

WhatsApp is rolling out a new feature which will allow users to share entire sticker packs with their contacts without any hassle, enhancing user experience. According to WABetaInfo, the official changelog for Meta's popular instant-messaging app's revealed that the new feature allows users to send their favourite sticker packs as a single message in their chats. Users simply need to tap the three-dot menu next to a desired sticker pack and tap "Send" to use this feature.

Once they hit the "Send" button, the entire pack is shared as a message in the chat, allowing the recipients to easily download it and start using the stickers right away with just a few taps.

This update addresses a frustration, common among users previously.

Before this feature was introduced, users who were interested in a particular sticker pack from another user had to ask that user to send each sticker one by one so they could save it as a favourite.

Now, with the new functionality, expanding sticker collections has been made simpler.

If you don't have this feature, it is important to note that some accounts may receive it over the coming weeks, as indicated in the official changelog.

However, the new feature is available for iOS users who install the latest update of WhatsApp from the App Store.

No let-up in high dengue incidence in KP as onset of winter delayed

PESHAWAR: With the start of winter delayed due to climatic changes, dengue hemorrhagic fever continues to spread in the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province with 19 new cases reported on Saturday. The virus is also in circulation due to frequent travel by people across regions, according to officials. They said the dengue cases reported in the province this year had risen to 4,167.

The steady incidence has belied the earlier claims of authorities about a significant decline in cases by mid-November in light of previous trends.

When contacted, director (public health) Dr Irshad Roghani said winter wasn't severe enough to eliminate mosquitoes — the carrier and transmitter of dengue virus — and the situation had been exacerbated by the frequent travel, the main cause of its transportation from one region to another. "We have a lot of vector population and the virus is coming in from other cities to affect residents. The delayed winter onset has led to the presence of the vector in the province for which we have enhanced public awareness of safety measures," he said.

According to a report of the Integrated Disease Surveillance and Response System at the Directorate General Health Services Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, the province has 60 active dengue cases and nine patients are under treatment in hospitals. A total of 4,104 cases have recovered from the disease.

This year, dengue has killed three people in the province, including two in Nowshera district and one in Swabi district.

Peshawar district has reported 1,339 cases, Mardan 333, Mansehra 243, Abbottabad 242, Kohat 234, Nowshera 215, Lakki Marwat 207, Hangu 205, Lower Kohistan 201, Charsadda 162, Bannu 132 and Haripur 114.

Dr Irshad said that besides frequent public travel, the transportation of goods, especially old tyres, were also causing the virus to spread.

"Used tyres are the mainstay of dengue spread. We have frequently been urging the people to prevent accumulation of water in tyres to deny breeding space to mosquitoes," he said.

The director said that in view of the climatic changes, a decision had been made for the enforcement of the Dengue Action Plan 2025 at the start of the next month to ensure measures for the elimination of mosquito larvae.

He said that usually, the DAP was implemented from March and April every year.

"Given the current situation, we will resume work at the start of the New Year," he said.

Reiterates the need for a focused approach toward farthest districts, emphasizing that these areas require more attention

Outlines a policy approach to visit the farthest districts of each province personally

GWADAR: As part of his commitment to enhancing service delivery and ensuring access to justice, the Chief Justice of Pakistan, Justice Yahya Afridi, has outlined a policy approach to visit the farthest districts of each province personally. This initiative aims to assess the facilities and challenges faced in dispensing justice at remote location.

In line with this vision, the Chief Justice Yahya Afridi made his first formal official visit to the farthest district of Balochistan (Gwadar), on Monday. The District and Session Judges of the remote districts, including Turbat, Panjgur, Washuk, Musakhel, Chagai, Harnai, Awaran, Barkhan, Kharan, and Zhob, joined the Chief Justice. During the meeting, the Chief Justice of Pakistan assured the judicial officers that he would ensure that they are given good environment, where they can work smoothly and safely. He further underscored the importance of upholding the dignity of judicial officers, whether presiding over a civil court or a superior court and maintaining the majesty and integrity of the judiciary across the nation. Acknowledging the unwavering dedication of judicial officers serving in remote and underprivileged areas of the country, the Chief Justice commended their exemplary efforts. He encouraged them to further strengthen their resolve and prioritize adjudication of cases to ensure justice is delivered efficiently and effectively to litigants.

The Chief Justice reiterated the need for a focused approach toward farthest districts, emphasizing that these areas require more attention. He asked them to share insights and identify specific resources gaps which is hampering dispensation of justice so that it can be addressed. He requested the respective High Courts to ensure that the best judicial officers are posted to such districts with a minimum term and that these officers are well looked after. He proposed that foreign training and other opportunities should be given to such judicial officers on priority by the Law and Justice Commission of Pakistan (LJPC). He further recommended that an e-campus facility be provided to district judicial officers wherever possible, to enhance their access to continuous learning and development. He emphasized the development of a system where posting in the furthest districts would be considered a privilege, aiming to encourage the judiciary to embrace such assignments enthusiastically. The Chief Justice clarified that these measures are not intended to undermine the support already provided by the provincial government and high courts but rather to supplement it. SABAH
